The National Board of Accreditation (NBA) is an autonomous body established to evaluate and accredit higher education institutions and programs in India, primarily focusing on technical education. Its mission is to ensure that institutions adhere to quality standards in education, helping enhance the overall academic environment. NBA accredits programs in various fields, such as engineering, management, pharmacy, and applied sciences. The accreditation process involves a rigorous self-assessment by institutions, followed by an external review team that evaluates aspects like curriculum, infrastructure, faculty qualifications, and student outcomes.

NBA accreditation serves as a mark of excellence, assuring students and employers of the quality and relevance of the educational programs. It plays a crucial role in enhancing the global competitiveness of Indian institutions and their alignment with international standards. The NBA is also involved in the continuous improvement of educational practices through periodic reviews and updates to accreditation criteria.
